LEADERSHIP MESSAGE

Dear Community Members,

You've undoubtedly heard me say how excited and blessed I am to work shoulder-to-shoulder with our employees and medical staff, as we try our very best to improve our patients' and families' quality of life, one patient at a time.

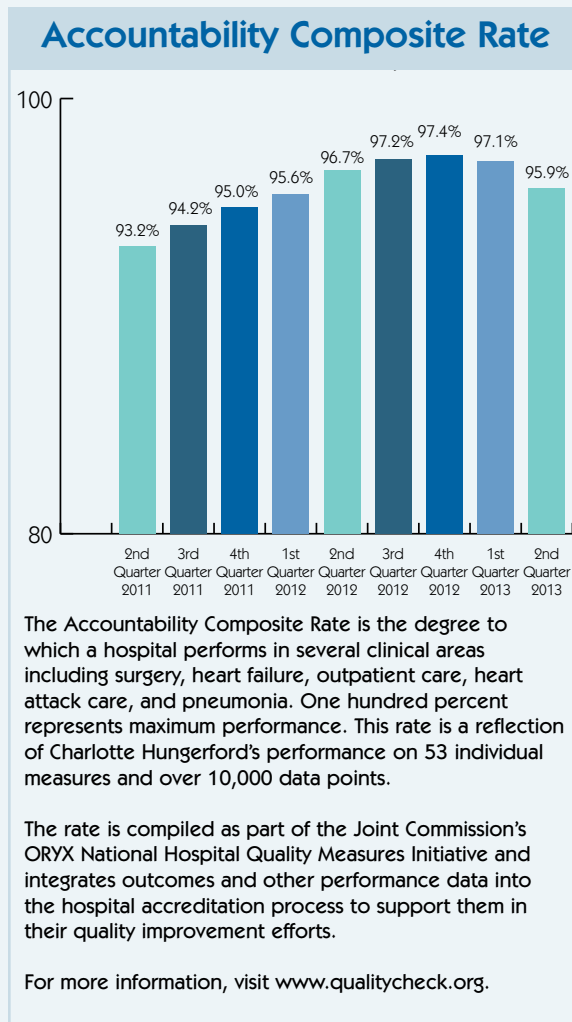

My staff and I feel extremely confident about our ability to serve you, as is reflected by our latest Joint Commission quality rating (see article below), now hovering above 95 percent out of 100 percent. This means we have met more than 95 percent of nearly 600 best practice requirements for the last 12 years, according to the most credible healthcare auditor in our business. This achievement happened solely because everyone who works and practices here wants every member of our Northwest Connecticut community to have no doubt in our ability to care for you in Torrington, better than you might be cared for elsewhere, for those services which we offer.

Very recently, I was faced with a decision about where I should undergo major surgery, something that was unexpected and very important to deal with, for the sake of my family and my quality of life, and the lives of others who to some measure depend on me. In making this decision, I found myself feeling incredibly positive about placing my trust in the hands of Charlotte Hungerford Hospital's surgeons, hospitalists, nurses, techs and support staff. I know this sounds a bit "over-the-top," but I realized at that decisive moment, that my staff had accomplished such terrific things over time that I was actually looking forward to having my own hospital family get me through this major surgical event.

As you might guess, I was not able to play "undercover boss," chiefly because our employees and medical staff have over time developed personal and professional interrelationships that now define us as a family of heartfelt and knowledgeable caregivers. As it turned out, my surgery and recovery went extremely well!

Looking back at my inpatient experience, I can only feel a debt of gratitude to our employees, physicians and board members who together have created a truly enviable environment in which patients can be accurately diagnosed and can begin their healing process, in a place filled with love and talent.

I have been leading hospital organizations for over 33 years. During that time, my connection with the CHH family has been the most unique and outstanding experience, wherein a group of dedicated people have made an unwavering commitment to work successfully with one another in "bringing hope and comfort to our ill and injured"!

I salute and thank our employees, medical staff, board, volunteers, auxiliaries and corporators for setting the "patient safety" bar high and for being willing always to work together for this most noble cause.

Respectfully,

Daniel J. McIntyre
President and Executive Director

For the 12th consecutive year, Charlotte Hungerford Hospital (CHH) has once again earned The Joint Commission's Gold Seal of Approval for accreditation by demonstrating compliance with the Commission's national standards and best practices for healthcare quality and safety in hospitals.

including infection prevention and control, hospital and medical staff leadership, and medication safety management. CHH underwent a rigorous unannounced on-site survey in August 2013 when a team of Joint Commission expert surveyors evaluated CHH for compliance with standards of care specific to the needs of patients.

"Although we are extremely pleased with our accreditation results, we are doubly pleased in knowing that our patients and their families can truly depend on Charlotte Hungerford Hospital for the services we provide," said Daniel J. McIntyre, President and Executive Director at CHH.

"Every member of our hospital family has been, and continues to be, motivated

CHH IS CREATING HEALTHY HABITS IN THE NORTHWEST CORNER

The Community Outreach Team at Charlotte Hungerford Hospital is dedicated to ensuring that people young and old residing in northwest Connecticut make good nutrition and hand hygiene a healthy habit.

In 2013, CHH created and delivered a series of presentations and outreach activities at local fairs, school events, and day care centers designed to educate and entertain the public and promote preventative health and active lifestyles.

Addressing the issue of childhood obesity is one of the top priorities identified by the staff and caregivers at Charlotte through its community assessment surveys. Using educational materials, games and activities from myplate.gov and other resources on good nutrition, the team promotes its message by challenging and quizzing children and adults on what foods are healthy and what choices should be made when they are dining out or preparing food at home.

Good hand hygiene is another very important lesson taught by the team. Children have a chance to discuss what germs are and how they affect a person's health. Pretend germs are viewed under a special light to show children how they hide and can be removed using hand sanitizer.

The team has been very pleased with the response, especially from the youngest participants. Team members agree that the area's local schools and day care centers have done a great job educating kids about the importance of hand washing. As flu season approaches, the team's goal is to increase awareness of how this simple procedure a few times a day can keep flu away from friends and family.

CHH and over 20 local community organizations, local non-profits, area agencies and schools formed a group called "Fit Together" and adopted a mission "to build the healthiest kids, families and communities through sustainable strategies that foster healthy eating and active living." The hospital's recent outreach and public events have incorporated this mission, and reinforced a united effort among the region's leaders and caregivers to build healthier communities.

"An essential component of a successful community-based system of services is the promotion of health through good nutrition and physical activity," said Tim LeBouthillier, Director of CHH Community Relations and Development. "We want to do all we can to make sure our community members start off on the right foot when it comes to health, nutrition and exercise."
